Underground, in the vaulted, echoing rooms of Brandenburg's oldest water-tower, a multimedia vigil will be held.

This curated, immersive, and interactive experience, inspired by the element of water, will flow between presentations from four Berlin artists. The theme encourages collaboration and trust among participants. At this historical landmark, we celebrate the facilitation of clean water, which was central to building this city and community circa late 19th century. It was a wellspring where trust was solidified; but later on, during WW2, a place where trust was broken, where lives were stolen and voices were lost. It is now a memorial associated with both identities.

Call and response, in music and in everyday life, is essential for communication. The affirmation of being heard rather than silenced cultivates a sense that everyone has a right to be present. By projecting moving portraits of water, what once was held inside the caverns, and by acknowledging how voices are heard and responded to, we explore how important trust and listening are for the protection of our community and environment.

It begins with a short art film from Ashley DuPree, projected in 360 degrees, inspired by the element of water and set to Beethoven's Moonlight Sonata. Next Alberto Lucendo will invite the audience to collaborate with him in creating a soundscape using water based instruments which he will mix together to curate a live, co-created sound experience. Melinda Gonzalez and Rachel Krause will then lead participants through interactive trust-building experiences incorporating sound & movement, followed by a guided meditation.

The activities will be in english. Warm clothes are recommended.
